Malta (Meli÷th Meliteæ). An island in the Mediterranean, 60 miles south of Sicily. Controlled by Carthage from the 6th through the 2nd centuries BC, the Maltese spoke a form of Punic/Phoenician. This is why Luke refers to the Maltese as “barbarians” (Acts 27:2, 4), a term referring to those who spoke neither Greek nor Latin.

The apostle Paul was shipwrecked on Malta near the end of his prison voyage to Rome (around 59 AD) and stayed there for three months (Acts 27:27-28:11).
